Efficacy of fungistatic antifungal coatings on human skin. Resistance to topically applied antifungal agents is a continuing challenge to dermatologists. The simultaneous use of silver compounds, such as povidone-iodine, and antifungal agents has been associated with toxicity and irritation. Fungistatic antifungal agents, such as natamycin, have been suggested to offer fewer adverse effects. However, little information is available regarding the efficacy and duration of fungistatic antifungal coatings. In this study, we evaluated the tolerance and efficacy of a topical suspension containing natamycin.

Five evaluable patients were treated three times weekly with the natamycin suspension. Each time period was one month. Skin tolerance and relative antifungal efficacy were evaluated weekly with cultures and magnified skin scrapings. Each patient was also evaluated monthly for the severity of his or her disease. The average duration of fungal infection was 13 weeks and three months. The average reduction in the severity of candidal infections in each patient was 78% to 100%. There was no correlation between reductions in the severity of disease and efficacy of natamycin as measured by the percentage reduction in the number of organisms recovered from cultures. Topical natamycin is a safe and effective agent for the treatment of intertriginous

The Sims 3. The Sims 3 Mac; The Sims 3. This invention relates to interleaving optical signals, and more particularly to an optical receiver employing interleaving and a frequency synthesizer to detect interferometer encoded optical signals. A coded optical communication system of particular interest to the present invention is the well known phase encoded system, wherein an optical signal is encoded by modulating the phase of the carrier. In the past, the encoded optical signal has been detected at the receiver by heterodyning a received optical signal with a synthesized local oscillator (LO) carrier. Thus a received optical signal at the receiver is mixed with a locally synthesized carrier which is shifted in frequency relative to the received optical signal by the frequency of the data signal. If the LO carrier frequency is properly adjusted, the received optical signal and the LO signal will be in phase when the local oscillator is tuned to a predetermined frequency. However, if the received optical signal experiences a phase shift of $\pi/2$, the LO signal will also be shifted by $\pi/2$ and thus will be in quadrature with the received optical signal. In this event, the LO signal and the received optical signal will be at a ninety degree phase shift with respect to each other and the resulting optical signal will no longer be detectable. One method of recovering from the shifting of the local oscillator carrier due to such phase shifts
